DECISIVE BATTLE NOW IMPENDING, SAYS LL. GEORGE

Blow May Come In Few Hours, Surely In Few Days

ALLIES ARE READY

American Troops Fast Making Allied Forces Of Equal Strength

ITALIAN VICTORY

Austrian Defeat Will Have Great Effect On General Situation

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—Speaking upon the Consolidated Fund Bill, which subsequently passed its third reading, the Premier, replying to the questions asked by Mr. Asquith in the course of the debate on the 18th, said that Mr. Asquith had asked for more information regarding the war situation but Mr. Bonar Law on the 18th gave all the information which could possibly be given at the present time.

Regarding the American troops, an amazing piece of organisation had enabled us to bring vast numbers of them to France since March 21. He could not give the figures but the numbers were sufficient to encourage the Allies and quite sufficient to disappoint and ultimately defeat our enemies. The American troops were of the very best quality.

With regard to the relative strength of the contending forces on the Western front, it was accurately represented by General Maurice when he said they were nearly equal on March 21. Since then, owing to new factors, it was impossible to make an up to date computation. The Americans were coming in at a great rate and he would be very surprised if, in a comparatively short time, the Allies were not stronger than the Germans on the West.

Germany To Use Last Reserves

Germany's last reserves will be thrown in during the next month or two, after which further reserves could only be obtained by a drastic comb-out of essential industries. There were indications that Germany was already resorting to that, which proved that the Allies had inflicted very heavy losses on the German forces since March 21.

The position naturally would be very anxious for the next two months but it was gradually improving and he would say without boasting that the Allied Generals felt confidence with regard to the issue.

"We are on the eve of very great events. There may be a great blow coming in the next few hours, but certainly within the next few days, upon which the issue of the campaign may depend. The Allies never felt better prepared to meet it."

Continuing, Mr. Lloyd George describes the last attack made by the enemy upon the French as an undoubted failure. We had proof that the enemy expected to reach Compiegne. The losses inflicted on the enemy were very heavy and, on the whole, the attack was undoubtedly a German defeat.

The same applied to the attacks upon the British. The first attack, being a complete surprise, was a considerable success but we had not emphasised sufficiently our own successes. The Germans were very severely beaten on the front of the 3rd Army and they were beaten two or three times when the enemy got to the 4th and 2nd Armies. On the whole the Germans had sustained severe reverses and had not achieved their objectives. We have every reason to be pleased with the present position and the enemy to be profoundly disappointed.

Situation In Russia

The situation in Russia was chaotic. Governments existed all over the place, almost every village had a separate government and the situation changed every hour. He agreed it would be to our interest and also just and equitable that we

Successful Local Attacks Carried Out By British

Positions Improved By Operation In Flanders; American Communique Reports Another Advance Near Chateau-Thierry

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 25.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports this morning:

The Canadians in a raid last night at Neuville-Vitesse brought back twenty-two prisoners and six machine guns.

We took a few prisoners in a successful raid southward of the Scarpe.

The hostile artillery was active during the night between Villers-Bretonneux and Morlancourt, southward of Avion and westward of Merville, gas shells being freely employed.

Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters wired yesterday:

An operation south of Meteren this morning which resulted in at least 100 Germans being killed took place in the angle which the enemy has thrust into our line west of Bailleul, having Meteren and Strazeele at either end of the base and Fletre near the apex.

The Germans lately have been paying a considerable amount of attention to this part of the line and in any thrust they might contemplate in Flanders would be likely to attempt to advance by this sector to the high ground west of Kemmel.

The enemy up to the present has been unable to gain an inch of ground in the direction of Strazeele. We have not only dealt him a heavy blow but we attained objectives which considerably improve our line.

Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports this evening:

A minor operation carried out last night in the neighborhood of Meteren was completely successful. All our objectives were gained and our line advanced. We captured ten machine-guns.

The French took a few prisoners in a successful raid at Locre.

Aviation.—Despite strong winds and low clouds yesterday our aeroplanes carried out reconnaissances.

There was little fighting in the air. We destroyed one machine while two of ours are missing.

We dropped five tons of bombs during the day-time and fifteen during the night, of which six fell on the sidings and stations at Cambrai with good effect. One of our night-flying machines is missing.

An American official communique reports:

In local operations in the region of Chateau-Thierry we made further advance, capturing five machine-guns. A hostile counter-attack southward of Torcy, broke down with heavy losses.

Paris, June 24.—The official French communique issued this afternoon reported:

We repulsed an enemy attempt in the region of Antheuil.

At eleven o'clock last night the Germans again attacked the Italian positions at Mount Bligny, between the Marne and Rheims. After lively fighting the enemy was completely repulsed with serious loss. The Italians took some prisoners.

There was a fairly lively artillery duel in Woevre and Vosges.

The official communique issued this evening reports:

On the Plateau to the North of Le Port we improved our position by a local operation and took 170 prisoners. The counter-attack was immediately repulsed.

There was fairly lively artillerying between the Aisne and the Marne.

Yesterday five enemy aeroplanes were brought down and fifteen tons of bombs dropped on enemy aerodromes in Picardy and the valley of the Aisne, and also on his bivouacs in the regions of Chaulnes and Montdidier.

Mr. John Liddell Dies Following Operation

Well Known Shanghai Resident Succumbs In Tokio En Route To States

Mr. John Liddell, one of the most prominent men in business and public life in Shanghai, died Tuesday evening in the hospital at Tokio following an operation. Word of his death, telegraphed here yesterday, brought a shock to the foreign community.

Mr. Liddell had been in good health until about two months ago when he began to fail and he was advised to go to America for an operation. He left Shanghai on the Siberia Maru, accompanied by Mrs. Liddell, on June 13, and had proceeded as far as Tokio when his condition became suddenly worse. A specialist was called in and an immediate operation was decided upon. The operation was performed last Friday and was apparently entirely successful but later complications set in. Mrs. Liddell was at her husband's bedside when he died.

Mr. Liddell was 60 years old, his last birthday occurring on June 21, the date of his operation. He was born in Scotland and came to Shanghai from Canada, where he had engaged in extensive farming activities, in 1888. On arrival here he joined his brother in the firm of Liddell Bros. and Co. In business, social and sporting life he was always popular and active in Shanghai and during his residence here he served in a number of public offices, being at one time a member of the Shanghai Municipal Council. He was formerly president of the St. Andrew's Society and was a member of the Shanghai Club, Shanghai Golf Club, Country Club and Race Club, being a Steward of the latter for many years. The flags of all of these institutions flew at half mast yesterday.

Mr. Liddell is survived by his widow and four children and two brothers, the latter residing in London. Of the children—a son and three daughters—John H. Liddell is now in the army in England, two of the daughters are at school in that country and the eldest daughter is married to Captain H. E. Ruynell, R.F.C., of Kobe, now an instructor in Toronto.

The plant has been raided several times by French and British airmen. In one raid over 100 persons were killed by French airmen and considerable damage done to the works.

DR. SUN YAT-SEN HERE; GOES TO FRENCHTOWN

Former Head Of Southern Government Is Suffering From Eye Trouble

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, accompanied by his secretary, Mr. Tai Tien-shu, arrived in Shanghai on the Omi Maru yesterday afternoon. He did not land on the N.Y.K. wharf in Hongkew, but took a South Manchurian launch which conveyed him to the French Bund, where he was hurried to his residence on Rue Vallon. Dr. Sun is suffering from eye trouble, the right half of the face being swollen and dressed in bandages.

As the Omi Maru came up river, 300 Japanese students and an equal number of friends, ex-Parliamentarians and other personages waited anxiously on the N.Y.K. wharf, but the launch came up to the ship before it cast anchor and took Dr. Sun and his party off at once. On the launch a few visitors were received.

At the French Bund, Mr. Xavier, Chief Inspector of the French Police, personally looked after the safety of the Southern leader and prevented all suspects from approaching him.

It is understood that Dr. Sun will remain in Shanghai for a considerable period.

UNIVERSITY CLUB PARTY SUCCESS DESPITE RAIN

The showers interfered with the garden party plans of the American University Club yesterday but the tea dance and the rest of the entertainment transpired with entire success at the Columbia Country Club. The rain delayed the arrival of many guests but by 5:30 p.m. about fifty were on hand and as the skies cleared others dropped in until practically as large a crowd as had been anticipated had gathered.

The Carlton orchestra was in attendance and the Club rooms provided adequate dancing space. The rain had ceased by tea time and tables were set on the verandah for the serving of refreshments. A quartet rendered several selections and Professor Li, of the Government Institute of Technology, performed a number of excellent juggling and sleight of hand tricks.

The lawn was in too saturated a condition to permit of the proposed tennis matches and besides was congested with a large concourse of frogs, toads and other fortunate beings of semi-amphibious attributes, the antics of whom, or which, as the gender may be, provided considerable entertainment to the picnickers. A game of water polo was proposed but the proper spirit of adventure seemed lacking.

Former United States Consul-General Charles Denby and Admiral Tsai Ting-kan were among the Club's guests.

British Press For Exact Conditions But Meet With No Satisfaction

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—In the House of Commons today Mr. Ronald McNeill asked "What are the terms on which Holland agreed to allow Germany to use the railways through Limburg? Is the effect of the agreement to set free for purely military traffic the German lines to Belgium through Vise and Liege?"

Lord Robert Cecil replied that His Majesty's Government has repeatedly pressed the Netherlands Government for precise information respecting the arrangement with Germany. He regretted the request up to the present has not been met although the Government has been told that traffic is confined to civilian goods.

AUSTRALIA'S EFFORT IN WAR IS RECOUNTED

426,000 Men Enlisted Out Of Total Population Of Five Million

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—Striking figures setting out Australia's great effort in the war were given out by Mr. W. M. Hughes, the Premier of Australia, at today's Australasian luncheon.

He said that Australia had enlisted 426,000 soldiers, of whom nearly 320,000 had been transported 14,000 miles. Australia alone had organised and paid for the equipment, transport and maintenance of this great army. For the past two years she had maintained five divisions in France and the equivalent of one cavalry division in Egypt and Palestine and had kept up all her cadres to strength by voluntary enlistment.

The Royal Australian navy exceeded nine thousand officers and men. Australia bore the whole cost of the Australian navy, which, during the war, was entirely placed under the control of the Imperial Government.

Although the population of Australia was barely five millions considerably over eight percent had enlisted. 48,780 men had been killed in action and 133,000 wounded, while he was proud to be able to say that only 3,274 had surrendered to the enemy, principally owing to stress of wounds.

In other words Australia, one of the most sparsely populated countries of the world, had lost approximately one percent of her whole population or over two percent of her males of all ages.

Her total war expenditure exceeded £220,000,000 up to the end of the present month. The cost of the war to her would be in the neighborhood of £100,000,000 during the present financial year.

Australia would bear the cost of repatriating all her troops and re-establishing them in civil life, at an estimated cost of £30,000,000.

The liability of the Commonwealth for pensions already exceeded £3,500,000.

Australia did not complain of these heavy burdens as her heart was in the war.

In conclusion Mr. Hughes made a strong appeal for settlers.

AUSTRIAN FORCES UNABLE TO RESUME BATTLE FOR WEEKS

Defeat Inflicted By Italians On The Piave Is Crushing

SPIRIT IS BROKEN

Many Of Best Enemy Units Now Have No Fighting Value

MONTELLO FREED

Italians Have Won Back All Lost When Battle Started

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—It is understood that the Austrian defeat is so crushing that it will be impossible for the enemy to resume a serious offensive for several weeks. The spirit of his troops is broken and some of the best Austrian units no longer have any fighting value.

One of the causes of the Austrian disaster was faulty judgment in placing their reserves. The German scheme of attack was cunningly worked out but the Austrians neglected to apply German thoroughness to details, hence their reserves failed at a critical moment to meet the clever strategy of the Italian High Command.

The line of the Piave from Montello to the sea is now held in great strength and it will be impossible for the disorganised Austrian armies to retake it. The military view is that there is not the least likelihood of the Austrians attempting to recross the river.

Thirty-seven divisions of enemy troops have been identified.

Crowning Result of Victory

An Italian official communique reports:

Yesterday gave us the crowning results of our victory.

Pushed up against the bank of the Piave in an ever narrowing strip of ground and incessantly bombarded by our artillery and aeroplanes, the enemy, after maintaining himself desperately on the right bank for eight days at the cost of enormous sacrifices, began on the night of the 22nd a withdrawal to the left bank. The crossing of the river under the deadly fire of our artillery continued on Sunday, protected by a strong array of machine-guns and covering troops who, after a stubborn resistance, were driven back by our troops.

Montello and all the right bank of the Piave, with the exception of a small portion at Musile, where the struggle continues, have been recaptured. Over 4,000 prisoners have been taken with a great quantity of arms and material.

An extraordinary number of Austrian dead covers the ground, proving the valor of the enemy and his great defeat.

Great Moment of War

Italy's victory is hailed as glorious news which will be universally held as a great moment of the war. The announcement made by General Diaz, the Italian Commander-in-Chief, that the enemy is retreating in disorder is regarded as being of the utmost military significance, but experts warn against the assumption that all danger has been adverted on the Italian front as the ability of the Italians to take the offensive must depend on the magnitude of the disorder among the Austrian forces.

Nevertheless it is conceded that the victories on Asiago Plateau and the Piave influence the balance in favor of the Entente on all fronts, if only by discrediting the legend of German invincibility, while the effect of the splendid victory upon the Italian temperament may evoke a national spirit that will prove irresistible.

It is difficult to determine the causes for the dramatic collapse of the offensive planned on so grandiose a scale and backed with such enormous resources. The warmest tribute is paid to the astonishing recovery of morale which has resulted in avenging the battle of Caporetto but it is feft that the undoubted skill, rapidity and valor of the Italians is not enough to explain the decision of the Austrian High Command to retreat. The internal unrest in the Dual Monarchy probably affected the troops, though no proof of that fact is found in the desperate bravery with which the Austrians fought, but the news leaking out from Austria-Hungary shows that the conditions are bad enough to influence a decision by the High Command that will cause gnashing of teeth in Berlin.

The newspapers in London seize the occasion to emphasise the necessity for the Allies not concluding a separate peace with the Hapsburgs, but taking a firm and unequivocal stand by the side of the Slav peoples in Austria-Hungary.

The Daily Chronicle calls on Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau to go boldly beyond the obscure formula of the Versailles conference in this connection, and to sound out clearly to all the oppressed Hapsburg peoples the note of insurrection and resurrection.

Paris, June 24.—The opinion is generally expressed that the Austrians have received one of the severest blows in the war and at a time when the internal situation is menacing.

Montello Is Evacuated

Rome, June 24.—The latest news this afternoon is that the Austrians have wholly evacuated Montello and recrossed the river Piave, partly by the one remaining bridge and partly by wading.

They were followed up by the Italians who captured several hundreds of prisoners, besides others which have not yet been counted, and also field-guns and war material. The Italians likewise recaptured seventy-two of their own guns.

The Italians are now on the north bank with one bridge at Failz and another at Nervesa, where they are making bridgeheads and meeting with little opposition.

The Italians have captured some Austrian batteries, probably about one dozen.

Between Montello and Zenson the Italians are on the river the whole distance. They are making bridgeheads at Pont-di-Piave and on the whole of that front they are pushing over cavalry.

Southward of Zenson the enemy is fighting a stubborn rear-guard action in order to cover the retreat of the main army but only two bridgeheads are left to them, one at San Dona-di-Piave and the other at Grisolera.

The situation at present is that the Italians have practically restored the situation to what it was prior to the Austrian attack. The Austrians have very few reserves in the Piave sector and have also made very few trenches eastward of the Piave besides which their lateral communications are bad, rendering the passage of reinforcements from the north very difficult.

Austrian Losses Double Italians'

It is moderately estimated that the Austrian losses are double those of the Italians.

An Italian war correspondent says that the Austrians are not only beaten but have suffered a partial disaster the extent and importance of which cannot yet be estimated.

The Austrians during the night began to withdraw across the Piave, hoping to carry out their retreat without drawing the attention of the Italians but the Italian patrols, penetrating the enemy lines, discovered the maneuver. The Italian artillery directed an intense fire on the enemy troops as they were crossing the river and at eleven o'clock yesterday morning the Italian infantry with magnificent dash took the offensive. The Italian troops broke in on the Montello front and the Austrian retirement became a disorderly retreat. At Nervesa, which the Italians have reoccupied, they found the Austrian guns intact with ammunition, as well as the Italian artillery which was lost at the beginning of the offensive.

The waters of the Piave are carrying away much material and hundreds of corpses.

The Italian aviators bombed and machine-gunned the retreating masses which were crowding the bridges.

A semi-official communique says that the Italian pressure on Sunday from Montello to the sea obliged the enemy to retire in disorder and he has already been thrown back at almost all points to the left bank of the Piave. Montello has been entirely retaken and along the Piave considerable bodies of Italian troops have, in large sectors, fought their way to their old line on the right bank of the river, while detachments of infantry and cavalry have reconquered several positions on the left Bank of Caposile. Numerous bombing squadrons elsewhere have also been thrown across the river.

Decisive Battle Now Impending

should stand by Russia if she desired it.

Russia had been treated brutally by Germany. She had been dismembered and treaties were torn up the day after they were made. The Russian people were beginning to realise this. They were beginning to get different ideas with regard to the Allies and to appreciate what German militarism meant. The hatred of Germany was becoming deeper and Russia was readier now than she had been for months to co-operate in any move to oust the Germans and the situation was full of hope. The difficulty was one of access. The only power with access to Russia was Japan.

What has happened in Italy is full of promise. It is one of the most portentious events of the year, one of the military victories which may have infinitely greater results than other victories which look bigger from the point of view of effectives engaged or territory lost. It is a defeat inflicted upon a power not under the best condition to sustain it. It is a great encounter in which Austria is being held despite having brought in all her available men for the attack and thrown her whole strength upon the Italian Army.

Half of Austrian Forces Used

Considerably over 50 percent of the Austrian effectives have been actually engaged in the fighting. If the Austrians had captured the whole of Montello the Allied position might have been disastrous but, in the first place, the enemy was held by the Italians, who next began to bring pressure to bear. The pressure increased every day and now the Austrians are in full retreat and the only question is not whether they are going to retreat, but whether they can retreat. The whole of Montello has been captured and Italian troops for the first time for months are on the left side of the Piave. Lower down Italian cavalry has crossed the river and is pressing the enemy hard. The Italians have recaptured half the guns they lost in the first offensive. In the South the enemy is fighting a continuous rear-guard action to secure his retreat. After committing its whole strength to a great offensive the Austrian Army has had inflicted upon it one of the greatest disasters of the war.

This is happening at a time of serious discontent in Austria when three-fifths of the population is completely out of sympathy with the objects of the war and more sympathetic to the aims of the Allies: when three-fifths of the population has recognised that the only chance of achieving anything in the nature of freedom is to secure a great victory for the Allies: at a time when the whole of the Austrian prisoners belonging to the Czecho-Slav races are actually congregating in Siberia in order to go over and fight for the Allies, which was very significant. Whatever our difficulties on the West front, the difficulties of the Central Powers are infinitely greater. The Austrian population is being driven by hunger to discontent and sedition and, in some of the most important Austrian towns, even to revolt, while over half the Austrian army sympathises with the objects of the country with which they are at war.

Moreover, the Central Powers have difficulties with Bulgaria and Turkey.

Therefore, while we should not build up false hopes, all that was needed was to keep steady and to endure, and he had not the faintest doubt, surveying the whole position, that our victory would be a complete one.

ANTI-PEKING FEELING INCREASES IN CANTON

Uncompromising Attitude Of Militarists And Japanese Loans Are Cause

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Canton, June 20.—Leading Cantonese as well as the government officials have publicly announced again their independence. The plans of the Peking militarists to suppress Kwangtung at all costs and to borrow money on the security of Kwangtung property, mines and the like, are doing immense harm to the Peking Government which is now being denounced and opposed not only by the interested partisans and soldiers but also by the common citizens who hitherto have paid very little attention to the struggle between the old type and the younger militarists. The secret Chinese-Japanese agreement has aroused intense excitement, especially among the student body; and an attempt to borrow another $5,000,000 from the Japanese on Cantonese security to attack Canton is giving another excuse to accuse Peking.

Kwangtung cannot be attacked so easily as some of the Northern generals believe, according to the boasts of the Canton press. The defeat of Lung Chi-kwang and the withdrawals of Kiangsi and Fukien troops from boundary towns of Kwangtung should be considered by all who daily talk of Kwangtung suppression.

While internal struggle and mutual suspicion do much to weaken the forces of the South-Western provinces, many still claim that the few patriotic leaders they still have will succeed in drawing all together finally. Much advance has been recently made in the effort to unite all parties, and the administrative council of the reorganised military government, a coalition affair, has now four members ready to proceed, they being Dr. Wu Ting-fang, Admiral Lin Pao-yih, General Lu Ying-ting, and Tsen Chun-hsuan. They are now urging the rest, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, ex-Premier Tong Shao-yi, and General Tang Chi-yao to accept their posts at once. Delegates have been sent to follow up Dr. Sun and Mr. Tong. They believe their mission will be successful. Members coming to attend the National Assembly in regular session are arriving daily. Now there seems to be no doubt that it will procure a legal quorum.

In reply to General Lu Yung-ting's peace proposal, President Feng telegraphed that as the present Cabinet is a responsible one, he is not in a position to interfere with its policy, according to Chinese reports.

An armistice has been declared by General Wu Pei-fu, the Northern commander in Hunan, and General Chao Hun-ti, commanding the Hunan rebels. Premier Tuan has repeatedly urged General Wu to resume hostilities.

The Japanese are hesitating in furnishing the $5,000,000 loan to General Lung Chi-kwang with the Kwangtung mines as security on account of the opposition of the French Legation as well as the prominent Cantonese residents in Shanghai and Peking. General Lung's return to the South, therefore, has been postponed.

General Wu Ping-hsian, the Chief of the Metropolitan police, has ordered all Japanese returned students who are unwilling to return to their studies to leave the Capital at once.

SHELL SHOCK MASTERED PHYSICIAN REPORTS

Tells Neurological Association Surgeons At Fighting Front No Longer Dread It

Atlantic City, May 9.—The convention of the American Neurological Association was informed today that "shell shock" no longer was dreaded by medical men on the fighting front. It had been thoroughly mastered, it was said, and recoveries had been marvelous.

Lieut.-Col. Colin Russell gave statistics which showed that the cures were so positive that only 4 percent of the patients, when they were returned to duty, suffered a second "shock" from some expected explosion. He told of bringing about cures in a few minutes. A soldier who was certain that his leg had been paralysed was cured by the application of a slight electric current.

The rapidity of recovery, Dr. Russell said, depended entirely upon the mental capacity of the patients, some requiring months of "suggestion education" before they were able to control themselves.

Dr. T. H. Weisenburg of Philadelphia, President of the association, in his annual address, said that America had made a precedent for the nations by establishing a division of neurology and psychiatry in the Medical Corps of the army.

"This is the first time an army has ever created a special neurological department," Dr. Weisenburg said, "and, while there may have been some skepticism in the beginning, the work of the neurologists and psychiatrists has been of such exceptional merit that universal recognition has been given it by other branches of the service. New fields are constantly opening up for which a large number of men are needed. Aviation is almost altogether a neurological problem."

Put yourself in my place!

"Suppose you had come to Shanghai, had found no decent lodging place, had been taken into the Y.M.C.A., given a job through its Employment Agency, taught a useful trade, learned the dignity of labor, succeeded in its night school, found health in its gymnasium, learned to "play the game" fair and finally had come out with practical ideals—wouldn't you want to help some other fellow get there too? Of course you would! That is why the Y. M. C. A. Committee wants your subscription for the new $250,000 Annex at 26 Nanking Road TODAY.

TLS. 300,000 JUDGMENT HOLDS IN SHUN PAO CASE

Mixed Court Orders Defendants To Pay After Rehearing Sensational Newspaper Suit

The Tls. 300,000 judgment rendered January 21, 1918, by Italian Assessor Ros and Magistrate Yu in the Mixed Court in favor of the plaintiff in the Shun Pao case, Shih Tse-bay, was upheld in another judgment given yesterday following the rehearing of the case last Monday. Against this the plaintiff was ordered to pay to the defendants Sze Ka-shu and Chen Ching-han, the sum of Tls. 55,050, representing half of the amount of the purchase price of the paper received by the plaintiff from the defendants. The full text of the judgment follows:

The Court has given defendants all possible opportunities to prove that the sum of Tls. 300,000 awarded to plaintiff was more than the proper amount of damages payable as the present value of the Shun Pao.

The defendant has utterly failed to do so, as the Court cannot take in consideration his valuation based on books alleged to be those of the Shun Pao, but which have not been submitted to the scutiny of either the Court or the plaintiff.

The sum of Tls. 300,000 payable to plaintiff is hereby confirmed subject to the reduction of one half of the amount received by plaintiff, viz., Tls. 55,050.

Therefore judgment is given for plaintiff for Tls. 244,950 with costs.

An application for immediate execution of the judgment was made yesterday afternoon by Mr. John Hays, counsel for the plaintiff. Mr. W. A. C. Platt, representing the defendants, asked to be allowed to satisfy the judgment in four installments. The Court reserved decision.

SUPPORT GOVERNMENT, LABOR PARTY IS URGED

Ministers Appeal To Members Not To Disturb Unity Of Nation

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—A manifesto issued by the Labor ministers dwells on the unprecedented influence of labor in the councils of the nation. It says that their position, however, is rendered very difficult by incessant sniping on the part of anti-national factionalists. It explains that sometimes they have to vote in opposition to their inclinations because that is a condition of coalition Government. Nevertheless, they have passed in three years measures of democratic reform greater than at any time in the history of the country.

The manifesto appeals to everybody in the ranks of labor to do nothing which will tend to destroy the unity of the nation during the war because upon the people of Great Britain largely depends the future freedom of the world.

The manifesto issued by the labor ministers is significant because it is issued on the eve of the labor conference at which a pacifist group submits a motion asking the conference to break the political truce. The adoption of this motion would make the position of the Laborite ministers impossible because they must then either leave the Government or refuse to obey the mandate of their party. Moreover, Mr. Hodge, the Minister of Pensions, Mr. G. M. Barnes, who is a member of the War Cabinet, and Mr. G. H. Roberts, Minister of Labor, are threatened with opposition in their seats from the unofficial labor group.

GALLIPOLI MEMORIALS PLANNED BY COUNCIL

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—The Colonial Office has issued a summary of the proceedings of the Imperial War Conference between June 12 and 19 under the chairmanship of Mr. Walter Long, Secretary of State for the Colonies. Those present included the Secretary of State for India.

Emphasis was laid on the resourcefulness of the British navy in securing the safe and unhindered attendance of representatives from all parts of the world.

The representatives, deliberating on the work of the Imperial War Graves Commission, dwelt on the need for all possible pressure being brought to bear on Turkey to safeguard the graves on Gallipoli. It was decided to ask the Commission to give a common form to the memorial for all ranks. A resolution was carried in favor of the cost of carrying out the decisions of the Commission being borne by the respective governments of the Empire in proportion to the numbers of their dead. The cost was estimated to average £10 per officer or man buried but the estimated cost of the memorials to those whose graves have not been identified will be considerably less in proportion.

The Conference initiated a discussion on the question of the establishment of a central authority in the United Kingdom to supervise the emigration of persons formerly employed in the naval and military services and others after the war.

Various phases of the economic policy of the Empire after the war were also deliberated.

GERMAN RAID ON LONDON COST TEN AEROPLANES

Seven Brought Down And Three Crashed In Attempting To Land

(Reuter's Agency War Service)

London, June 24.—Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters reports this evening that confirmation has been received from German sources regarding the losses of German machines in the air raid on London on May 19-20. In addition to seven of the squadron, numbering twenty-eight machines, which were accounted for, it now appears that three more machines crashed on landing. It has been known for some time that the landing of these powerful bombing machines has proved very difficult in the hands of those accustomed to another type of machine and a large number of learners have been killed and machines destroyed in the German aerodromes. It now appears that even experts after a long exhausting flight are in no way at the end of their troubles when the seas and shores of Great Britain have been left safely behind.

NORWEGIAN STEAMER LAUNCHED YESTERDAY

Solvaer Will Leave Is Six Weeks For Saigon And Marseilles

The Norwegian liner Solvaer, 5,000 tons deadweight, was launched yesterday afternoon at the Pootung yards of the Shanghai Dock and Engineering Company before a big crowd. The Solvaer was christened by Mrs. Sems, who broke a bottle of champagne on the prow as the liner started to slide down the ways.

The Solvaer is the third ship built by the Shanghai Dock and Engineering Company for Norwegian owners and two more sister ships are on the stocks. She is 277 feet 5 inches in length, has a moulded depth of 42 feet and a loaded displacement of 5,000 tons and will be equipped with triple expansion engines of 1,500 indicated horse power at the Shanghai yards of the Dock and Engineering Company whither the Solvaer was towed yesterday afternoon.

The Solvaer will be capable of speed of 11 knots. The liner was built for Messrs. Mueller and Johnson of Bergen, Norway, and will leave for Saigon in about six weeks. There a cargo of rice will be loaded for Marseilles. Capt. Norvalls will command the Solvaer.

Following the launching speeches were made by Mr. John Prentice and Mr. W. S. Burns for the builders, Mr. O. Thorensen, agent for the owners, Capt. F. Parker and Capt. Muller who superintended the construction. Bouquets were presented to Mrs. Sems and toasts were drunk to the owners, builders, officers and to the Norwegian government.

Mr. Prentice said that the company has signed contracts with the British government for three standardised ships of 5,000 tons each. The first ship built in China recently sailed up the Clyde, he said, and he expressed the hope that the Solvaer would prove as satisfactory to the owners as the other ships built by the company have proved for other owners.

Among those attending the launching were Mr. O. Thorensen, agent; Capt. Muller, superintendant of construction; Capt. Norvalls who will command the Solvaer; Capt. F. Parker and Mr. P. C. Reilley, representing Det Norske Veritas; Mr. John Prentice and Mr. W. S. Burns of the Shanghai Dock and Engineering Company; Mr. and Mrs. W. Utne, Mr. and Mrs. J. Timm, Capt. E. I. M. Barrett, Capt. PENCIL FACTORY OPENS; FIRST PLANT IN CHINA

China Pencil Co., Now Producing, Has Ceremony At New Ward Road Manufactory

China's first pencil factory was officially opened yesterday when the China Pencil Company's new plant at 1091 Ward Road was thrown open for inspection. Mr. H. H. Fox, British Commercial Attache, made the formal opening speech and afterward inserted the silver key into the lock and swung back the doors of the factory.

"The Company," said Mr. S. M. S. Gubbay, managing director, in introducing Mr. Fox, "is an Anglo-Chinese enterprise promoted last year by a few British and Chinese business men who were actuated by a desire to obtain a share of the pencil trade hitherto controlled in the Far East to a large degree by the Germans and Austrians."

Mr. Fox in his address welcomed the advent of this entirely new industry to China and spoke enthusiastically of the great era of industrial activity which must follow the war in which China, with her great resources, will be in a position to play a leading part. Her wealth of raw materials of all sorts, cheap labor, industrious people and favorable climate all pointed, he declared, to her becoming one of the big manufacturing countries of the world, with Shanghai the leading manufacturing city in Asia. Mr. Fox urged a closer and more extensive co-operation between Chinese and foreigners for the successful development of industries and predicted the success of the newly formed company.

"To a literary people like the Chinese," he said, "writing materials come with a special appeal and I doubt not that before long the China Company's pencils will be found in schools and colleges and business houses all over the country."

Mr. Percy Tilley, chairman of the board of directors, replied to Mr. Fox's speech and then sketched the growth and aims of the company. He stated that for the present the output would be confined to one good serviceable grade of black pencil, but later, if success is indicated, other grades will be added as will also the manufacture of colored and copying pencils, crayons and the like. Mr. Chan Chi-lan also spoke.

Following the speaking the guests adjourned from the flag-decorated matshed to the factory where a demonstration of pencil making was given and tea and other refreshments were served. Each of the large gathering of visitors was presented with a packet of newly made pencils as a souvenir.

The new company has a paid up capital of $100,000 and its present capacity is 100 gross of pencils a day. The machinery is Japanese but it is planned later to secure additional equipment from England or America. Materials—graphite and wood strips—are being secured from America. Manufacturing for export and local consumption will go forward in full swing.

The directors of the company include Mr. Tilley, Mr. Chan Chi-lan, Mr. A. Black, Mr. Chang Yau-liang, Mr. R. S. Dougal and Mr. S. M. S. Gubbay, Mr. Frank W. White is secretary. The company's offices are situated at 38 Kiangse Road.

JOHN SHERWIN GROWS UP

Finding Love And Place In 'The Main land,' Fine Sequel To An Ugly Tale

After reading E. L. Grant-Watson's "The Mainland" (Alfred A. Knopf), we know, probably, the why of "Where Bonds Are Loosed." The earlier book explains young John Sherwin, who is the hero of the new book. But it still is true that the explanation comes out of a sorry mess, unworthy of the strength and talent of Mr. Grant-Watson—a story to be read at full length neither to the profit nor to the pleasure of the reader. Rooted in the mire of the original story, the sequel now in hand has sprung forth as might spring a robust and fascinating flower, not wholly fragrant, from the depths of an unwholesome swampland.

In "Where Bonds Are Loosed" we left the elder John Sherwin and Nurse Desmond on Kanna Island, down Australia way, in an unholy solitude for two. In the very beginning of "The Mainland" we come upon young John a brown, handsome lad of sixteen naked and knowing nothing of shame, sitting on a sand dune and regarding the Indian Ocean. He is not ignorant, though he has never left the island. He knows nature as it lies about him and can prevail in a conflict of wills and, if one may so express it, of wits over any of its living forms. But he knows there is a world beyond Kanna and he intends to go there. Mr. Grant-Watson's book is the story of his adventures to and through the outlying world, and of his settlement, after much stormy land-voyaging, in a port of destiny.

The John Sherwin of "The Mainland" has inherited the strength and pugnacity of his father, with the sensuality and the intellectual possibilities of his mother. He is attractive to women. From the beginning of his career away from the island he is subject to exploits of passion. The second of these is a degrading episode which drives him to drink. Sobered and smarting under a fellow man's contempt, he takes to tramping, to the bush, to gold seeking, and emerges from the wilderness with money, self-control, balance and a sense of power. After that, his story is that of a strong man who works hard, loves hard, lives hard between intervals of urban luxury, but surrenders completely and readily at last to the hand of a woman who will make him a home.

Mr. Grant-Watson wrote impressively well "Where Bonds Are Loosed," an unclean story of unnecessary length and detail. He has written even better this new book, which is gross only where the man and the logic demand grossness, but which loses no jot of realism through not dipping into needless vileness and obscenity. He has, perhaps, made his hero a trifle precocious. The boy certainly advances marvelously in his first five months off the island—he has got away in his nineteenth or twentieth year—when he has for guide only the young wife of a yacht-owning explorer, a neglected bride, who falls in love with him and teaches him to read, to write and to listen to poetry. One must remember, however, the virility of mind repressed through boyhood and most of youth. And anyway, prodigy or not, John Sherwin is a character greatly worthy of creation and of development.

Mr. Grant-Watson is naturalist as well as novelist. His new book is made beautiful in spots by his descriptions of an Australian environment out of doors and in particular, in a midway section, by his story of the succession of seasons and of growths in the bush.

SOCIALISM TO REVIVE

Out of the Chaos, Says Mr. Spargo That Came With the Clash of War

John Spargo's "Social Democracy Explained" (Harpers) is a message of hope to those who still believe in the main in the principles of Marxian Socialism. It is a book made up of addresses which our author was preparing for publication when the war broke out. Says Mr. Spargo:

"The chaos and demoralisation in the Socialist ranks which occurred as a result of the virtual breakdown of the Socialist International, and the betrayal of the movement by the German Socialist majority, caused me to lay aside the manuscript of this book. Now we are recovering from the shock, and in all countries the Socialist movement is undergoing a process of readjustment and reorganisation. I find myself deeply involved in the struggles incident to that readjustment.

"Having severed my connection with the Socialist Party, because I believe that party had been unfaithful to the principles of Socialism, it is perhaps necessary for me to say what otherwise would be superfluous—namely, that I am still a Socialist."

Bolshevism, Mr. Spargo finds, "is a form of romanticism, which cannot be of lasting influence." He does not attempt prophecy in detail.

"It is impossible at this time," he says, "to forecast the future development. This much is certain: the Socialist movement will be revived and restored, and the Socialist program will be realised."

'OVER PERISCOPE POND'

The Vivid Letters of Two Yankee Girls Seeing the War at First Hand

In October, 1916, Miss Esther Root of New York sailed for Paris to assist in the charitable war work of Dr. Ernest W. Shurtleff of the Protestant American Church. In December, 1916, Miss Marjorie Crocker of Boston sailed for the same purpose. In February the girls met in Paris, and soon became fast friends and roommates.

Each wrote home to her family vivid, amusing letters about her work and experiences. These letters have been grouped in such a way that they present a continuous and stirring narrative, told first by one girl, then by the other, and they are published (Houghton-Mifflin Company) under the title "Over Periscope Pond."

Many experiences of the trench lines and the battle-ruined village our young authors describe vividly. Their crowning sensation came when, two in a party of five girls, they watched perilously from a Paris balcony a German night air raid on the French capital.

RUSSIA TO FIND HERSELF

Liberalism And The Intellectuals Not Dead, Says M. Charles Rivet

An important new book on Russia, her present conditions and her prospects, is "The Last of the Romanoffs" (E. P. Dutton and Co.), the work of M. Charles Rivet, who for sixteen years, until a year ago, lived in Russia as Petrograd correspondent of the influential Paris paper, Le Temps. It has been translated by Hardress O'Grady.

The first part of the book deals with Russia as it was before and during the early part of the war. It is a rapid survey of happenings and policies and the causes for them, with notes on the Russian character, the classes into which the Russian people were divided, the course of internal affairs, the methods and extent of the peaceful German invasion of Russia, the influence of Rasputin and how he obtained it, and to what ends it was exercised. The survey of the revolution deals more with causes, tendencies of thought and forces of national life and character than with material events of the upheaval, although all of these that are of consequence are narrated vividly.

The last section deals with the relations between France and Russia and discusses with much severity the failure of France in the days before the war and during its first two years to endeavor to understand the growing forces of democracy among the Russian people. These last chapters are an indictment of secret diplomacy and international ignorance.

M. Rivet pleads for faith in the Russian people, and declares his belief that they will yet establish their nation on a firm footing of democratic government. Of liberal and intellectual Russia, whose inactivity during the collapse of the last few months has made many observers anxious and sceptical, he says:

"The Russian Liberalism which was the begetter of the new era has stood by watching impotently the internationalist machinations of some and the German manuvers of others. It refused—and was wrong to refuse—to begin a struggle which might have seemed to be a defense of its own interests. But its inactivity does not at all mean that it has been swallowed up in the whirlwind. It will certainly plan a part in society again. It knows now in face of the excesses which have been committed, what it owes to the country. It knows that the enormous majority of Russians is only too anxious to follow it, as that mass is Russian first and foremost and cannot make head or tail of German Marxian theories. Russia will find itself again after a moment of aberration of which the Leninist propaganda was one of the principal causes."

Illustrations for M. Rivet's book include portraits of the Tsarina, the Tsar, Rasputin, Boris Sturmer, Miliukoff and other notables of the revolutionary period.

BASEBALL SATURDAY IF WEATHER PERMITS

Navy And Shanghai Will Play Two Week-End Games If Rains Holds Off

The Chinese tell a story about a dragon sleeping and a snake sneeking up on the water tank and letting the stopper loose and subsequently hiding it behind a cloud. Old Man Dragon has been snoozing since last Friday and the snake has the baseball diamond resembling a middle aged lake. The dragon was awakened last night according to Won Bad-lung and the snake has decided it will be safer in the tall timbers.

Kid Dragon swears the sun will be on hand today and tomorrow, so Ban Johnson Bunn announced last night that the Navy and Shanghai would play ball Saturday and Sunday. The games will start at 3.30 o'clock.

Mitchem, the latest acquisition to the Naval grenade throwing unit, will work in one of the games while Scott will hurl the other.

The Shanghai twirlers are Judge Hadley, Roberts and Tinkham. Swan is out of town, Porterfield signed up a long contract the other day to play ball in the married man's league and Eddy will not be able to play for a couple of weeks at least.

Eddy has been in the hospital for a week with malaria getting his release yesterday. Doctors state that he must rest up for some time and in all probability will not be able to play until after July 4.

Gene Turner is lost to the team and Saturday will probably see Neprud at first and Wilhoit playing second. Eddy's absence will mean a hole in the pitching staff and in right field as the southpaw can play the right garden in good shape and his batting ability is needed by the local hitless wonders.

There are rumors of "Helen" Bristow hitting town in time to get in a little practice before the Fourth, but this is doubtful.

Second Polo Match Played

The second regular water polo match of the Rowing Club's season took place on Tuesday afternoon before a large attendance. The match was a marked improvement on the previous contest.

Messrs. F. S. Ward and H. D. Rodger selected and captained the respective teams, which were as follow: Whites: Zellensky (goal); Bertes and Ward (backs); MacCabe (½-back); Brown, Johns and Macdonald (forwards).

Blues: White (goal); Barnes and Grant (backs); Rodger (½-back); Brodie, Mansfield and Starling (forwards).

Mr. M. R. Gordon was a popular and efficient referee.

On the ball being thrown in Brown secured possession and passed back to MacCabe, who transferred to Macdonald. The latter took a shot at goal but had hard luck in striking the upright. Play was carried to the deep-end which Blues were defending, and after several attempts had been stopped by their goalie, he had to allow one fine shot by Johns, which gave him little or no chance.

The Blues, nettled by this first goal against them, made a strenuous effort to score, and eventually, just as the referee was about to call half-time, Mansfield managed to beat Zellensky from close up and the sides crossed over with the score board reading:

Whites	1 goal
Blues	1 goal

In the second moiety Brodie was first on the ball, and Rodger took a shot at goal, but Zellensky was on the job and cleared nicely. Give and take play followed for a while, the balance being somewhat in favor of the Whites, and finally Brown scored their second goal from a scrimmage near the Blues' citadel.

From now onwards Whites had things pretty well their own way, the Blues' forwards being unable to break through the fine defense of their opponents. Macdonald scored their third goal and Brown the fourth. The Blues not scoring this half, the final result was:

Whites	4 goals
Blues	1 goal

On paper the Blues team looked, if anything, the stronger aggregation of the two, but they were outclassed in teamwork and also in the throwing of their backs, who rarely cleared sufficiently well to give their forwards any chance. Furthermore, the latter did not come up far enough and only impeded their own side's defense tactics. Rodger was a tower of strength, but got little or no support.

For the winners Zellensky was steady and sure in goal, Ward at back was absolutely safe, while Bertes failed to mark his man sufficiently regularly. MacCabe made no mistakes, and the forwards—Brown, Macdonald and Johns—all scored during the match and played nicely together, Johns being the makings of a promising junior, the other pair playing well up to form.

It is proposed to hold regular matches in future, until the mid-week miniature galas commence on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and thereafter on Mondays and Wednesdays.

From the keenness displayed in the practice games, the Club should have a first-rate team this year, and competition will be very close indeed for several places on the VII.

It was regrettable that Page, Agassiz, Nash, Scriven, Woodfield and several others were unable to be present, as it would then have been possible to stage two games.

The mixed bathing season of the Club began on Tuesday evening, the opening night being well attended.

Allied Red Cross Shoot

Competitors are reminded that the competition will be held tomorrow at 6 a.m. and 5 p.m. sharp.

Conditions for Practices No. 2, 4 and 6 will be as for S.V.C. classification (and not as priviously notified) viz:

No. 2.—100 yards standing.

No. 4.—200 yards (lying behind cover) firing over the mound or sandbags.

No. 6.—300 yards lying in the open (no rest).

Practice No. 4.—200 yards, bayonets optional. Squadding. Competitors will be squadded at the firing point, and must retain their places in the same squad and on the same target number for the remainder of the competition.

Any competitor failing to present himself when his squad is called to the firing point will suffer disqualification. Competitors not firing must remain at least 50 yards in rear of the firing point, with the exception of the squad next to fire.

Scoring and Signalling.—For practices Nos. 2 and 4 scores will be notified at the conclusion of the practice, and not after each shot. For practice No. 6 marking will be made by Bisley dummies showing number of hits and their value. The scoring will be as for S.V.C. classification, viz:—3 points for a hit in Practice Nos. 2 and 4, and 4 for a bull, 3 for an inner, 2 for a magpie and 1 for an outer in Practice No. 6.

All's Well with the Allies

"WE are on the eve of very great events. There may be a great blow coming in the next few hours, but certainly within the next few days, upon which the issue of the campaign may depend. The Allies never felt better prepared to meet it." These words form the keynote of one of the most lucid and momentous pronouncements made by Mr. Lloyd George, the British Premier, since he stepped into the shoes vacated by Mr. Asquith. In the course of an exceedingly businesslike statement in the House of Commons in answer to Mr. Asquith's request for more information regarding the war, every word of which has a convincing ring about it, the British Premier traversed the whole ground of the present campaign and at the end must have left in the minds of his listeners the certain impression that all is well with the Allies, an impression not the less convincing because of the terseness with which it was conveyed to the assembly, brevity being combined with the supply of a fund of information that will come to those owing allegiance to the Allied cause as additional reassurance that final victory will not be with the side enjoying a temporary excess of big battalions.

Mr. Lloyd George gave pride of place in his statement to the part being played by the United States in the present struggle, inasmuch as America commands premier position in the attention and thoughts of those following the progress of the swaying battle in the West. Regarding the American troops, the British Premier declared that an amazing piece of organisation had enabled the Allies to bring vast numbers of them to France since the opening of the German offensive on March 21. Although he was not in a position to give the figures, he assured the assembly that the numbers were sufficient to encourage the Allies and amply sufficient to disappoint and ultimately to defeat the enemies of the Allies. The speaker also acknowledged that the American troops now fighting alongside the French and the British were of the very best quality.

With regard to the relative strength of the contending forces on the Western Front—a matter that has doubtless agitated the minds of our readers—Mr. Lloyd George tells us that it was accurately represented by General Maurice when he said that they were nearly equal on March 21. Since then, owing to new factors, it was impossible to make an up-to-date computation, but the Americans are coming in at a great rate and the British Premier says he will be very surprised if, in a comparatively short time, the Allies are not stronger than the Germans in the West. It will therefore be seen that the numerical superiority of the Germans is only temporary and will soon be overtaken.

Germany's last reserves, according to Mr. Lloyd George, will be thrown in during the next month or two, after further reserves can only be obtained by a drastic combing out of essential industries. Germany is already resorting to this measure in the case of certain industries, which proves in the most conclusive manner that the Allies have inflicted very heavy losses on the German forces since March 21. Mr. Lloyd George frankly admits that the position will be very anxious for the next two months, but at the same time the situation of the Allies is gradually and steadily improving, in view of which fact it is permissible for the British Premier to say without boasting that the Allied Generals feel confident with regard to the issue.

Note what Mr. Lloyd George says with regard to the results of the enemy offensives. He describes the last attack made by the enemy upon the French as an undoubted failure. He says that the Allied Commands possess proofs that the enemy expected to reach Compiegne. The losses inflicted on the enemy have been very heavy and, on the whole, the attack was undoubtedly a German defeat. The same is true of the German attacks upon the British. The Germans have sustained severe reverses and have failed to achieve their objectives, and the Allies therefore have every reason to be pleased with the present position and the enemy to be profoundly disappointed.

The picture drawn by Mr. Lloyd George of the conditions in Russia emphasises afresh the urgent need of Allied intervention in that hapless land. The situation there is described as chaotic. Governments exist all over the place. Almost every village has a separate government and the situation changes almost every hour. The British Premier agrees with his political opponent, Mr. Asquith, with regard to the need of Allied intervention in Russia, and he says it is just and equitable, and also to Allied interests, that the Allies should stand by Russia if she desires it. Russia has been treated brutally by Germany. She has been ruthlessly dismembered and treaties have been torn up the day after their making. In view of the tragic fate of Belgium, Russia ought to have foreseen the consequence of compromising with a faithless foe. However, Russians are beginning to modify their ideas with regard to the Allies and to appreciate what German militarism means to Russia and to the world. The people of Russia are discovering the truth about Germany in the same way that the people of the United States discovered the truth about that country. President Wilson exercised the utmost patience and forbearance towards Germany in the early period of the war, so that the people of America could see for themselves the character of the government they were dealing with, so that when the time came he had the whole nation behind him imbued with solid unanimity for war, whereas precipitate and premature action on the part of President Wilson would have engendered serious opposition. The best tribute that can be paid to President Wilson is that those of his critics who formerly subjected his policy to literary castigation now praise the wisdom of a policy whose subtlety has been revealed by the course of events.

Touching the Italian situation, the position is described by Mr. Lloyd George as being one full of promise. The Austrian offensive, on which Germany must have built up great hopes, is one of the most portentous events of the year, calculated to lead to far-reaching results. It is a great encounter in which Austria is being held despite having brought all her available troops for the attack and thrown her whole strength on Italy. Considerably over 50 percent of the Austrian effectives have been actually engaged in fighting. The Austrians are now in full retreat, and the only question now is not whether they are going to retreat but whether they can retreat. In the south the enemy is fighting a continuous rearguard action to secure his retreat.

After committing its entire strength to a great offensive, the Austrian Army has had inflicted upon it one of the greatest disasters of the present war. And this is happening at a time of serious discontent in Austria, when fully three-fifths of the population are completely out of sympathy with the objects of the war and more sympathetic to the aim of the Allies and recognise that the only chance of achieving anything in the nature of freedom is to secure a great victory for the Allies; at time, moreover, when the whole of the Austrian prisoners belonging to the Czecho-Slav rares are actually congregating in Siberia in order to go over and fight for the Allies, which is a matter of very deep significance. Whatever the Allied difficulties on the Western Front, the difficulties of the Central Powers are infinitely greater. The Austrian population is being driven by hunger to discontent and sedition and, in some of the most important Austrian towns, even to revolt, while over half the Austrian Army sympathises with the objects of the country with which they are at war. Moreover, the Central Powers have growing difficulties with Bulgaria and Turkey.

Mr. Lloyd George closes a brilliantly conceived statement on a triumphant note, which cannot but hearten the Allies. He exhorts us not to build up false hopes, all that is needed is to keep steady and to endure, and he has not the faintest doubt, surveying the whole position, that the Allied victory will be a complete one. Best of all, perhaps, Mr. Lloyd George gives us a truthful and dependable picture of the war's progress, and we find not one discouraging note in it.

How Kultur Differs Widely From Civilisation

(New York Sun)

"Germany has Kultur. France has Civilisation. And Kultur, mind you, is not Civilisation nor is Civilisation Kultur." Capt. Fernand Baldensperger, himself representative of the highest type of the French Civilisation he was describing, paushed as he let his listener grasp the significance of his words. He had made a telling point. The Kultur which the German is continually flaunting in the face of the rest of the world as the highest type of Civilisation is not really Civilisation at all. Instead it is the most artificial, most leveling, idea the world has ever known.

"Kultur takes absolutely no account of the human factor," continued the French Captain. "Kultur aims to standardise knowledge and even human tendencies, to make hard and fast rules not only for science, literature and all other intellectual pursuits but for the minutest actions of human life as well. Under the German system variation caused by human differences is unthinkable. French Civilisation, on the other hand, is based directly on the literal meaning of the word.

"Civilisation of course follows out the idea of the city which succeeded that of the tribe. The city was intended to be merely a framework for administrative purposes, within which human tendencies and differences would have free play, but within reasonable bounds. This idea on a much larger scale is French Civilisation. There is no artificial measure or level to which all must rigidly conform. Individual differences are expected, allowed for, and are not restricted or inhibited."

Now At Columbia University

Capt. Baldensperger, who is now visiting professor of French culture and civilisation at Columbia University reflected for a moment, seeking examples which would illustrate his characterisation of German Kultur and French Civilisation. His experiences in the trenches—he served continuously in the Toul sector, where our troops now are, from October, 1914, to April, 1916, as intelligence officer—naturally directed his thoughts to this field. A smile of reminiscence lit up his face as he described his observations. While he spoke of seemingly homely and everyday matters they served to make his conceptions of German Kultur and French Civilisation stand out in wonderfuly clear manner.

In the course of his duties Capt. Baldensperger had occasion to read many letters written by German soldiers. While they were usually well written and in a fairly clear hand, the sentiments expressed and the manner of expressing them was invariably the same. It made no difference to Fritz or Heinie whether he was addressing his wife, his friends, his children or his associates. German Kultur with its narrowing and artificial standardisation was so ingrained in him that he found it impossible to differentiate between the fears and hopes of his loved ones at home and the casual interest of acquaintances.

"In fact," said the Captain, "the vaunted German efficiency should have been stretched and every German soldier should have been provided with carbon or copying paper. Copies of each letter written could have been produced with one operation and much energy would have been conserved.

"How different, though, were the letters written by the French soldiers. The most illiterate among them whose handwriting and orthography was of the very worst showed the inborn, humanising effects of French Civilisation. The poilu also wrote home of his health, of his desires and of his needs but each letter had a distinctive character. His wife was cheered and encouraged, his children were urged to emulate the examples of good men, his friends were confided in, his acquaintances were regaled with amusing incidents of trench life."

Points Out Tendencies

Capt. Baldensperger pointed, out certain distinctive tendencies not already mentioned in the French Civilisation which America is staking her all to maintain.

"Since the seventeenth century Frenchmen have strongly opposed the idea of the superman. Napoleon alone is the exception. They object to the idea in morals, in ethics, in political power or in wealth. American multi-millionaries, or in fact any multi-millionaries, are heartily disliked by Frenchmen. In ability there are, if we may use the word, millionaries, but these again are distasteful to Frenchmen.

"Take the case of Sir Francis Bacon. We in France cannot conceive how a man who is reputed to have been one of the world's greatest scientists could also have written the plays attributed to Shakespeare. Such a man would have been tremendously out of touch with humanity, and more than anything else the French people cannot stand a man who is not human. Napoleon was accepted because he was an embodiment of collective forces, because he was inflated by the spirit of the mass, because he was the logical development of the Revolution."

Capt. Baldensperger's description of the highly human, highly demo-crative, tendency in the people of France coincides closely with the Westerner's love in America of the all around man, the man who is a passably good farmer, a fair mechanic, a welcome story teller—in short, a thoroughly human man. Western veneration for this type elected Andrew Jackson to the Presidency, characterised our national spirit as the century became older and continues to the present day.

"Capt. Baldensperger," interjected the interviewer, "America entered the war, in the words of President Wilson, to 'make the world safe for democracy.' Americans have their own conception of democracy. What do you, as a professor of French culture and civilisation, consider to be the distinct contribution of France to democracy?"

Gave The Idea Of Equality

"The idea of equality," answered the Captain with slight hesitation. "This idea is a French contribution and must prevail. The French are not interested at the core in liberty as is the Anglo-Saxon. They are against authority except where it is really necessary. Even necessary authority, however, must explain itself. The soldier must know why he is called upon to take part in a charge.

"The French people's demand that authority explain itself gives elasticity and suppleness to French administration. The French people are at once the easiest and the most difficult to handle."

Capt. Bladensperger sees two other strongly outlined developments in France besides the democratic tendency. There is the idea of legality—the old Roman feeling that law may right everything and enforce all kinds of conditions—and also what Capt. Baldensperger termed the "conservation of tradition" tendency.

"These people," said Capt. Bladensperger, "know too much about the acts and traditions of their forefathers and are not inclined to favor anything which would alter the established state of things."

The legal tendency is perhaps a little stronger than the "conservation of tradition" idea, especially among the middle classes, he said. In questioning prospective officers during the first winter of the war Capt. Baldensperger met many young Frenchmen of all three tendencies.

An interesting explanation of the excellent understanding which exists between the French poilu and the American fighting man was suggested by Capt. Baldensperger.

"They both see the same jokes and laugh at the same things," said he. "Blustering, misplaced authority raises a storm of laughter, and the officer who never forgets he is an officer and acts the colonel, even in the Y. M. C. A. huts, is an object of ridicule both to the French soldier and the American fighting man."

Colonel House

(Norman Hapgood in Leslie's)

When some genius comes to write the history of the Wilson administration, or when some other genius summarises with art as well as knowledge the biggest of all wars, an inevitable figure in the story—outstanding, fascinating, and difficult to draw—will be that of Edward Mandell House, first of Texas, then of the United States, and finally of the world. He will stand out in history because of the important contribution he has already made, and possibly because of the still greater contribution he may make in helping to steer the drifting nations into safety. The portrait, if properly drawn, will be fascinating because the personality portrayed is charming, unusual, and in a sense mysterious; and it is difficult to draw because its significance and its distinction lie not in features salient and easily apprehended, but in harmony, balance and justness. He became in Texas politics a quietly guiding force, and a forward-making force, because he knew men, studied questions, and neither sought nor would accept anything for himself. Too frequently a great stage is the graveyard of reputations made in a smaller setting, but Colonel House has proved adequate to the post of counsellor-in-chief, and lieutenant-in-chief, to our President at a time when the very pillars of civilised life are shaking. If I were to select from all this globe a mind and heart worthy to be the umpire in any attempt to bring life and system out of destructive chaos, I should without hesitation choose this quiet gentleman from the vast reaches of the American hinterland.

I have seen him give decision and solutions not only in large and general affairs but also in details that come up from day to day in a campaign, and in all the opinions, broad or pointed, that I have known of his giving I have yet to find one that retrospect does not declare to have represented the surest human judgment. It is doubtful whether the most penetrating painter could find in his face the signs of this security of vision. It is a kind face, bright, eager, and gentle, that goes with manners that never injured stranger or friend. As one looks at the whole man, the blue eyes are the center of attention. Outside of these luminous eyes there is no external feature that commands attention. It is perhaps not so much an object that confronts one as a presence, an atmosphere created by expression and by manner.

We do not run overmuch to sages in America. Our shrewd and cautious men are likely to be intent on material gain, and our reformers are as likely to have more energy than discretion. I speak with some feeling, for I have been in the reform whirlpool myself these many years and I feel in myself the faults of the tribe, as well as seeing it in many of the leaders. Take, if you like, Colonel Roosevelt, Senator La Follette, Colonel Bryan, William Travers Jerome, John Purroy Mitchel and Francis J. Heney as men who have stood out on the firing line at one time or another in the progress of the last two decades. The more permanently effective of this group are so, not through unfaltering judgment, but through courage and resourcefulness. Roosevelt, La Follette, and Bryan have been buried again and again, and funeral sermons preached from Oregon to Maine. They refuse to stay dead, not because they learn to avoid mistakes but because in their volume of living, and in their fundamental orientation, numberless mistakes can be swallowed up. Such men are deterred by no danger and no bruise. Although they are part of what is best in the American spirit, one would not choose them for guidance in the settlement of a troubled world. Colonel House is a good fighter also, but the gift in which he so notably excels is practical wisdom. He has courage, but other men have that, and there are not many in whom an error of judgment is a thing impossible to find.

In a mind thus marked by safety in its results one might expect to find delay in reaching conclusions. Many of Colonel House's opinions, on the contrary, are noticeable for speed. There are, of course, matters which he ponders for a long time, but often one who consults him receives a positive view immediately the question is propounded. This is often the way of philosophers in action. Lincoln delayed some of his conclusions until he had carefully examined a situation many times, but quick and decided expressions were equally characteristic of him. When I was in Paris recently a French writer who came to ask me for a word picture of Colonel House desired particularly that I should pick out some well known figure in history as analogue. He brought forward Cato, Cincinnatus, Socrates, and other beacons, but I had to give it up. Although it would be possible to use an illustration on a single point, the whole personality reminds me of no one else. In using the word philosopher I doubtless led my French friend astray. It was used by me in an American sense, easily understood by us, particularly in the West; whereas to the Frenchman it raised the picture of a library, quotations from Aristotle, an atmosphere of literature and history. Colonel House deals rather with conditions that have actually passed before his own mind, during his own life, and mainly in his own country. In that respect as in others he is distinctively American. In only one respect does he suggest another nation rather than our own. In England one is more likely than with us to find men who seek nothing for themselves, are glad to avoid responsibility and limelight, but have a high sense of service and the most unshakable honor.

Three times has the President sent Colonel House to Europe to represent his views and to bring back information. In investigation, in cooperation, and in solution, therefore, this private citizen has been carrying the weight of representing our Republic at a time as critical as any the world has seen. That he found a man so fully able to carry such a responsibility is one of Mr. Wilson's surest triumphs. That list of triumphs was built up when he accepted battle with the plutocratic influences at Princeton; when he chose his stand with relation to the machine in New Jersey; when he selected his campaign issues in 1912; when he laid out the legislative program of his first term; when he was going through his difficult campaign for re-election. It has been extended in foreign affairs, in regard to Mexico, South America, Panama tolls, China, and the Great War. It has been increased by such appointments as those of McAdoo, Brandeis and Hoover. He has never been more profoundly right than in his selection of the sure-footed and far-seeing man who, throughout his two terms, was to act as his foremost representative, counsellor, and friend.

The Y.M.C.A. In France — By Ella Weeler Wilcox

(Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the poetess, who is now in France doing war work, sends the following letter describing her experiences in Paris.)

Some months ago there was a request made by the Y. M. C. A. of America for thirty-five million dollars to carry on war relief work. Our country, with its usual liberality, gave more than was asked—it gave fifty million.

All who contributed to that fund may rejoice, for it has been put, and is being put, to wise and wonderful uses.

That fund helped the Y. M. C. A. to establish many canteens and entertainment rooms for our soldiers in America, and it has established three hundred such places in France.

A visit to four of the seven in Paris revealed many interesting facts. These Parisian canteens are in reality hotels for the accommodation of enlisted men and officers obliged to remain in Paris for a time before being sent to the front, and for those who are back on furloughs to rest up and gain new strength for further strenuous attacks on the worst foe to human progress the human race ever encountered.

These canteen hotels are not charities. The men pay for their rooms and their food, but they pay less than one-third the price they would be compelled to pay elsewhere.

The Y. M. C. A. fund makes it possible for these canteens to furnish comforts at less than a nominal price and to provide attendants, who delight in doing everything in their power to brighten the life of the soldier. Entertainments are arranged, reading matter supplied, the help of interested women given and a home atmosphere created, which acts as a moral uplift on the men.

Besides the good done to the soldiers by this Y. M. C. A., there is a reciprocal good done to the Y. M. C. A. men by their close touch with the big issues of life. A few years ago the very term "He is a Y. M. C. A. man" implied to the unthinking an anaemic type of man, forever worrying about the salvation of those who differed from him in dogmas, and who was continually shocked by the levity and liberality of his friends and associates.

The man who comes into the canteens with the idea of proselyting and "saving" the souls of the soldiers very soon finds himself in touch with such colossal problems of life, with such a variety of types of men in such unequal stages of development, that he is forced to study human nature from a new viewpoint.

One of the proselyting type (recently arrived from a small town in America) sat beside a stalwart Canadian soldier, just back from the front. They were watching a motion picture play. The soldier was filled with the joy of being in a scene of such peaceful pleasure, and he could not restrain his impulse to talk to a pretty girl in front of him, even though he had not been presented to her.

The other man was shocked, touched the soldier on the shoulder and said: "Remember, young man, you have other battles to fight."

"Yes," responded the Canadian soldier, "but I am trying to forget for a few minutes the last battle I was in."

This story was related to me by a Y. M. C. A. man, who proceeded to say that the association was occupied in humanitarian and humane enterprises to give the men good care, to build up their bodily health, to distract and entertain them wholesomely during the trying weeks and months of their preparation for war, and to substitute gradually and tactfully, right ideals of life for wrong ones, while leaving each man his own faith. Such is the big and worthy work of the Y. M. C. A. today. It is doing a magnificent thing for the race, as well as for the soldiers. And it is laying the foundation of a newer and broader Christianity; a Christianity which will substitute humanitarianism for dogmatism.

It was deeply interesting to find many of these Y. M. C. A. men wide awake on the subject of psychical research; a subject which appeals to suffering humanity over here. The constantly increasing proofs which these researches are giving to sorrow-stricken people of the existence of their dear lead on planes very near to those they love, and of their desire to communicate with them, and their unceasing efforts to comfort and help them, are far more satisfying in this crucial hour than theories which give no comfort to a heart wrung with the anguish of sudden loss.

There have been two exciting air raids here, and the philosophical attitude of mind in which these events are met by both the French and American population is wonderful.

Imagine a thunderstorm in mid-summer, increased tenfold and lasting three or four hours, and you have some idea of the sound of an air raid. The fact that much of the thunder is caused by the French defense guns does not greatly mitigate the feeling of awe, bordering on fear, which dominates while the raid lasts. Confident of the protection of invisible helpers, and regarding death as the birth of life, I remained in my room the three hours of the first raid since my arrival and wrote letters. During the second, ten ladies, mostly American, gathered in the rooms of the charming wife of a United States Navy paymaster and told incidents and stories of a character which gave a spiritual uplift, while we listened to the booming of sixty airplanes of the enemy of the world and to our defense guns, from 8.40 to midnight.

As we dispersed, one lady remarked that the evening had left her with a feeling that death was indeed a glorious adventure, to be anticipated rather than feared.

Across the street from where I am sitting a French builder is whistling at his work; and in the adjoining room a girl is singing. My chambermaid tells me with a smile that her son and husband gave their lives for their country. And no matter what happens, or what shadows fall, there is never a doubt in the French or American heart that the enemy will be laid low and the Allies will win.

The churches of France are filled as never before, and in front of every statue and picture of Joan of Arc always one sees reverent groups.

Obscured the sun, the world is dark.
Maid of Orleans, Joan of Arc,
Speak through the dark.
Let every heart in France be stirred
By such an all-compelling word
As thou once heard.
Say to each soul, "Lo! I am near;
My voice still speaks in accents clear.
Be still and hear.
The France I saved cannot be lost;
Though tempest-torn and terror-tossed,
Count not the cost.
Give, as the maid of Dormery
Gave all—gave life itself to see
Her country free.
Back of great France my spirit towers;
To aid her through the darkest hours.
With God's own powers.
Maid of Orleans, Joan of Arc,
Shine through the night, speak through the dark
The while we hark.

Dean Inge's Inspiring Message

Dean Inge, preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral, gave this inspiring message:—

"Whatever might be the end of the fighting, we should come out of this war as a great nation, which had proved that 100 years of peace and prosperity had not destroyed our grit or enfeebled our spirit. We were not a decadent people. After the war we should be a poor nation, as we had never been since the Middle Ages, and we must adapt ourselves to comparative poverty. But we are called upon to open a new page in our annals. We must, if we are to survive as a great nation, get rid of those disintegrating tendencies which were threatening us with ruin just before the war. It is the day of Democracy, and it fosters class jealousies. We must try to put all that behind us.

"A great deal of dust had been thrown in the eyes of the public by foolish newspapers which tried to silence those who dared to hint at obvious truths, and the public they misled was naturally cast down when it began to see things as they were. The fact was that, in the minds of those who were qualified to judge, the reputation of this country had never stood higher than it did today.

"Only that morning he was told that General Foch said to a Belgian Minister of State: 'I cannot find words to express my admiration for the English soldier.'" And Dean Inge said he was not speaking at random when he said that this was the opinion of the best and the most hostile judges—he meant the military rulers of Germany.

Dean Inge, preaching at All Saints', Ennismore Gardens, dealt with the problems of social reconstruction. He said that if the present deplorable state of feeling between employer and employed was to be mended—and unless it was our whole civilisation would break up in bloodshed, anarchy, and starvation—there must be a new spirit.

"Among the causes of unrest was the fact that the worker was often forced to make things which he believed were not worth making—things which it almost degraded him to make. Among the instances adduced was the making by a poor semstress of costly ball-dresses, which would be tossed aside in a few weeks. Futile and barbarous work was degrading. Redistribution of wealth was not of so much importance as stopping the waste of human energy. If money were well spent, it did not matter much who had it.

"No one," said Dean Inge, "had a right to waste human energy or to condemn a man to useless, unworthy toil. If only useful and beautiful things were made, nearly every artisan should be able to feel something of an artist."

The Rev. W. Temple declared in Convocation last week: "I joined the Labor Party last week. Most of us here enjoy security of tenure to an almost unheard of extent, and it is difficult for us to appreciate the position of those whose security is only of a week or a day, and over whose heads the nightmare of insecurity always hangs."

Speaking on the same subject in the Upper House the Bishop of London said a chaplain had reported to him "We have to face this passionate dream of Labor," added Dr. Ingram, that all the troops were talking about "It is not an ignoble dream. People was the beautiful new world which would follow the war. have a passionate craving for more "That is the life. No one can read Mr. Henderson's only thing worth going over the top sima of labor and say that it is not for," they said. a Christian ideal."

Messrs. I. Spunt and Co. write as follows in their report for week ending June 27.

China Cotton.—Although the market during the past week remained quiet with hardly any enquiry, prices nevertheless remained unchanged with a seemingly subtle steadiness and strength at the close which to all appearances would indicate the impression of a bullish movement of a more or less speculative nature. These circumstances coupled with the fact of the stocks of Yarn in the interior being very much depleted it is difficult for the moment to forecast, either one way or the other, the trend of the market in the immediate future and would therefore recommend vigilance in so far as to take advantage of favorable offerings that may transpire from time to time.

The crop situation remains unchanged as far as the local district and the Yangtsze Valley is concerned but should the heavy rains we are now experiencing continue for an under period without intermittent dry weather the new season's yield may be more or less affected both in the quantity and quality of the staple.

From reports to hand from Hupeh district the Cotton plant there is progressing favorably with an increase in the acreage planted for the coming season. Tone of the market, Steady.

BULGAR AMBITIONS CLASH WITH TURKISH

Constantinople's Pretensions To Dobrudja Territory Resented

SOFIA'S DESIGNS ON GREECE

Her Threats To Plunder That Country Probably Inspired Wilson's Message

New York, May 10.—President Wilson's telegram of reassurance to Garrett Droppers, the American Minister at Athens, giving assurance that the United States would see that Greece's integrity was preserved and her rights secured, was apparently in answer to the insinuations of German propagandists that America, which has not yet declared war on Bulgaria, might want to compensate Bulgaria for the taking away of some of her conquests by the cession to her of parts of Macedonia which were assigned to Greece by the treaty of Bucharest in 1913, and some of which Constantine allowed the Germans and Bulgars to reoccupy in 1916.

That Bulgaria has entertained designs on Greek territory to round off her conquests in Macedonia is indicated clearly by recent articles from Bulgarian papers extracts from which have reached this country. The Narodni Prava of Sofia, organ of Premier Radoslavoff, said recently:

"On our southern front there are Greek regiments. We are at war with Greece, and the consequences of the war will fall on the Greek State. We shall continue to defend our vital interests stubbornly, and for every new sacrifice more indemnity will have to be paid by those who are the cause of it. The Bulgarian people are fighting to bring about peace as soon as possible, and those who are hindering this ought to bear the responsibility. To distinguish between Greece and Venizelos seems to us quite ridiculous."

Besides Kavalla, Drama, and Seres, whose conquest by Greece in 1913 has been a sore point in Bulgaria ever since, there seems to be considerable aspiration toward Saloniki, with the drawback that, while much of the Greek territory desired by Bulgaria is now in Bulgarian hands, Saloniki is held by the allied armies. The more extreme elements in Bulgaria have lately insisted that Saloniki must be made Bulgarian by the treaty of peace, but apparently the bulk of sentiment in Bulgaria at present favors the proposal of a joint dominion by Greece and Bulgaria over the port, with Bulgaria holding, however, all of the hinterland.

Meanwhile the Bulgarians are having their troubles over the Dobrudja, which was taken away from the Rumanians by the treaty lately concluded, but was provisionally ceded to the Central Powers and not Bulgaria. It was generally understood that Bulgaria was to get it, but the cession was held off, for reasons which may be surmised from the following remarks of the Pesti Naplo of Budapest, which quotes "a Vienna diplomat" as saying:

"Bulgaria's allies are discussing what services she ought to render them in return for the great increase of her territories. These are to be in the first place of an economic nature."

It is yet to be seen whether German insistence has overcome Bulgarian unwillingness to fight outside of the Balkans to the extent of actually bringing about the transfer of Bulgarian troops to the western front.

The Dobrudja question, however, has lately taken another unfavorable turn, for the delay in the cession of it to Bulgaria has given opportunity for the fourth ally, Turkey, to put in a claim. The population of the Dobrudja, which was divided between Rumania and Bulgaria from 1878 to 1913, when the Bulgarian part was absorbed by Rumania, is mixed as much as that of any other section of the Balkans. Along with Rumanian and Bulgarian minorities Greeks predominate on the coast and Turks between the Danube and the sea. Unofficially Turkey is now laying claim to this territory—not, apparently, on the ground of nationality so much as for the sake of "Balkan equilibrium."

On this Radoslavoff's Narodni Prava comments:

"Neither Bulgaria nor Turkey has been in favor of this unfortunate theory of equilibrium put forward by the Constantinople newspapers. Bulgaria took arms to realise the unalterable aim of her policy for the last thirty years, national unity; Turkey, in order to bring to a successful end her efforts for assuring her existence by saving Constantinople. By the victory of the allies this twofold end is achieved. Bulgaria is holding de facto the territories to which the past and the present and all the treaties entitle her; Turkey is averting the danger from Constantinople—we hope forever. None will longer talk of equilibrium except those who, inspired by false principles and led by foolish ambitions, have lost the battle. We and the Turks, profiting by the lessons of the past and relying on mutual confidence, ought to have constantly before our eyes the safety that we have acquired by general victory, and ought to take advantage of the blessings of peace."

The Kambana, a strongly pro-German organ, says:

"Times have changed as well as agreements; these agreements produce all the unfounded alarms of Constantinople concerning the future relations between Bulgaria and Turkey; their base was destroyed by the results obtained during the present war by Bulgaria.

"If Bulgaria did not get the whole of Dobrudja at present it would leave an open door for pretensions, misunderstandings, and disagreements, and for future unfriendly feelings. Turkey would not desire such a situation.

"Bulgaria is at present the only neighbor of Turkey in Europe. Tranquillity in Bulgaria will result in tranquillity in Turkey, and tranquillity in Bulgaria ought to be the great desire of Turkey.

"The incorporation of the whole of the Dobrudja in Bulgaria is conducive to tranquillity in Bulgaria, and accordingly also in Turkey."

The Zaria of Sofia remarks:

"The question of the Balkan equilibrium may be put aside. It is too old and too much compromised to be seriously defended. The question now is whether our allies of today, the Turks, share our good feelings for them.

"We understand their grief about the lost provinces, but reasoning ought to be stronger than sentiment. This loss was in accordance with natural laws. Turkey has not lost all that she might have lost, and if she has not lost all she has to thank Bulgarian friendship for it in a great degree, if not exclusively. The equilibrium in the Balkans contradicts the principle of nationality. Only the enemies of Bulgaria can speak of such an equilibrium."
